The scientific community was shocked by the announcement of a Nobel Peace Prize winner for 2014. Not only for the results of the research, but also because it is happening at a time of financial crisis, when every state has budget cuts, with the main objective of reducing spending and saving money. The Nobel Prize for this year is awarded to Denis Mukwege and Nadia Murad. The former is an obstetrician who has been the only person to have received the Prize five times for his efforts in victims of sexual violence. The second is the first person from the country of the former Yugoslavia to receive this, which is also the first time in the history of the Prize. In the field of pharmacology, Murad has been awarded for her fight against the sexual violence which she has suffered as a refugee, which has been made public by her in a moving interview with CBS. Their citation reads: "for their efforts to end the use of sexual violence as a weapon of war and armed conflict, and for their actions to protect victims and promote justice".FYI
